 This is a very large, generously proportioned, fieldstone house. It is two and a half stories in height, three bays wide and two deep. It is very high and massive in feeling and has a very steeply pitched A-roof. The central bay and the left ^{west} bay on the front are occupied by doors. All the windows are six-over-six sashes deeply recessed into the thick walls. There is a chimney enclosed within each end wall ^{each gable} of the house. There is a much smaller, lower, two and a half storey ell at the rear, also of fieldstone. The house is set on a hill so the rear ^{East} basement level becomes a full storey. The front central-door of the house has a raised panelled jamb. The front hall has a simply turned newel and a narrow enclosed dogleg staircase. The shutters on the house appear to be original. At the rear of the property is a large fieldstone barn with wooden louvers built into the window ^{windown}.
